In a case where doctors disagree so much it would seem to be by far the best course for those interested to obtain skilled information at home from some such Company as the Telegraphic Construction and Maintenance Company, as to the possibility of laying a cable between this and Shanghai, and perhaps extending it to Tientsin, and also in defendant's mouth were found an English formation as to the expense. Of course, the sovereign, an Australian sovereign, a gold Na. being given into his oustody on board the first point is that of most importance. If, it is really impossible to lay a cable which can be guaranteed against accident, except such of different banks, $10 and $5 notes, altogether as must in the ordinary course of events occur to all cables, there is clearly nothing to be done but to rest contented with what wehave. But, if, on the other hand, a more expensive enterprise would result in a cable, which could be relied upon, the question of expenditure would probably be of subordinate ring, also, set with a stone and two pearls, a not know where the defendant lived even, nor than theories. importance, as the interest which commercial men here have in the enterprise is such that duced a piece of paper, which the defendant was West, when he met the defendant, who asked it would probably be quite possible to raise a large proportion of the requisite capital here, and to guarantee such a tariff for a certain number of years as would induce homecapitalists to subscribe the remainder. many other wants, that of telegraphic communication ith the North was only discovered with the means of supplying it; but, now that the telegraph has been instituted, it has become practically indispensable; and merchants are worse off in some respects in having a telegraph subject to periodical intecruption, than in having none at all. If £100,000 could be subscribed in Hongkong, Shanghai, and the intermediate ports, the probability is that the remainder would be found at home. At all events, it is clearly desirable for the Chamber of Commerce to obtain reliable information, ha in a case like the present, in which knowledge is eminently power, it must be evident that general complaints against the existing company cannot tend in any way to remove the difficulty, and that the

For the publisher years, grown interest has been manifested in the wonderful development of trade at Chinkiang, and for some time there , was an uncertainty us to what was the real cause of its rapid merease. It was found to be in the tasy method by which interchange of goods was made in the interior. Foreign imports were allowed free access to the districts along the great river and by canal to distant however, quite unimpaired. places, while in return a large amount of the surplus native produce was brought out under sisting of man and wife and three daughters. transit pass to the port. All metals (except nail-rod iron), decreased. Sugar, brown, a slight increase, but white sugar has fallen off more than 40 per cent. Of Transit Passes to take goods into the interior, 855 less have been issued during the first quarter. The total Customs Revenue at this Port has decreased from Tla. 110,430 second quarter last year, to the small sum of Tls. 39,587, or over sixty-five percent. The amount of native goods brought from the interior has increased, because these goods were purchased goods must soon stop, as but few more can be exchanged for pieco goods and other foreign imports. There is no demand for foreign goods because there is no money to pay for them, and the excess of native products that would be exchanged for them cannot bethus exchanged on account of the enormous barrier taxation. The increase of the trade at Chinkiang during 1871 and 1872, was from 50 to 100 per cent. The decrease for 1873 in about 40 per cent., as compared with last year, or about 90 per cent. less than it should be according to former years, unless there was some cause for the loss of trude, and it takes but, a little examination to see wherein this great change lies -restricting the trade with the interior cuts off somuch from the aggregate of foreign goods that would find a market if interchange of products could be mutual. The large amount of barter, induced by the cheapness with which On LONDON .-native produce came to Chinkiang, was in vogue five years, and we can note the result. This process of barter is suddently stopped, and trade falls back to what it was before the barter was allowed. What is the cause of it? We may ander at Transit Passes, but we can

THE TICHBORNE TRIAL.

(Telegraph.) SIXTY-THIRD DAY.—29TH JULY. Dr. Kenesly's address to the jury still confines itself to the same two leading topics. For the whole of vesterday the learned counsel practically did little else than mad portions of the Gusford-Tichborne and Daughty-Tichborne correspondence, and call attention to points that seem to favour his theory. The process is long, tedious, minute, and to the general public altogether uninteresting. There are, no doubt, passages in Roger's letters to Gosford and to Lady Doughty, and passages in Lady Doughty's letters to Roger, which can be so construed as to bear out the hypotheses of Dr. -Kenealy that Hoger was a most ill-behaved and vicious young man, that he had no real affection for his consin, and that he more or less detested all the members of his family. But, as may easily be conceived, a detailed examination of a buge volume of letters, in which a sentence is picked out here, and a sentence there, and the one explained as having this meaning, and the other as having that, is altogether incapable of condensation; and, even if reported verbatim, conveys but an imperfect and faulty impression to any one who has not read the whole correspondence from beginning to end. What is perhaps most pazzling-to those, at any rate, who do not as yet, find themselves able to trace the line of Dr. Kenealy's defance—is, that the learned counsel comments upon the letters of his client altogether ab extra, declaring that they are enigmas to him, and that he, for one, is unable to understand them. "What does this sentence mean?" he puls to the jury. "What does the other mean?" It might be thought that the only person fully able to answer such a question would be Roger Tichborne himself. But, as a matter of fact, it is avowedly a party of Dr. Kenealy's defence that the undoubted Roger was a man of mystery, and that the defendant is a man of mystery, and he consequently relies as an essential point in his case upon the fact that much of the Doughty-Tichborne and Gosford. Tich borne correspondence is full of dark and needlessly obscure riddles, to which no one but the defendant possesses the clue, and that the defendant binself, true to his own character, Hongkom; and China by Messrs. J. & R. Ten-refuses to unlock the mustary refuses to unlock the mystery.

It may be remembered that the learned coun- Arbreuth. sel has done his best to explain away what is, he contends, a misconstruction of his attack upon the Jesuit fathers of Stonyburst. All be intended to allege was, he declares, that the . reverend gentlemen were originally negligent: but he pever wished to assert that they wilfully corrupted the minds of their pupils. In a similar spirit be to-day alluded to some questions he had asked Lady Raddliffe as to certain | that he has always a great quantity of BEST medicinen prescribed for her by Mr. Lipscombe, with the view of fixing a date. "I am glad to to apply at his Shop. hear that explanation," said the Lord Chief Justice; "we certainly put another meaning upon the questions." And it is but fair to add, as Dr. Kenesiy complains of the press, that in both these instances the only ordinary interpretation of which his words were capable was that put upon them in each case by the Beach

this Work stands univalled. All the new words which the Chinesehive of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous obects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extense. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hithertesttained. YOUTH AND MIDDLE AGE. grets. As nothing is morally salutary but Christian type than those of his age. naturally upon a youth of brilliant promise; affection and trust: as a mau ought to stand. but it is not real with the majority and it | _Contemporary Review. leads to two opposite mischiefs. This excessive exaltation of youth leads the vain and frivolous on to greater frivolity and vanity; and some, who are neither the one nor the other, it almost excuses and justifies in their recoil from the inevitable yoke of years and their melancholy clinging to habits and companionship which no longer become them, and where they are not welcome. Those, on the other hand, who alike disdain fraud or self-deception, or to linger where they are not wanted, officiously anticipate the world's judgment, resolving to be beforehand with the insolence of youth, or gossip's cold scrutiny; and so do injustice to their manhood—the period of performance, the week-day of labour wherein is done the work of the world-and call themselves old before their time: an act of treachery towards self which is generally accompanied by similar treachery towards contemporaries; for no one affects age prematurely who does not, as far as he can, drag all his youth's intimates down hill along with him. "When people grow old, as you and I do," says a man of this temper to some friend, on whose un--accustomed-car the epithet falls chill and strange, "others do not care for us, but we seem wiser to one another by finding fault with them. I duresay that monks never find out that they grow old fools when age gives them authority and nobody contradicts them."-" The Four Ages," in Blackwood. THE CHAPTER COFFEE HOUSE. The old taverus of London are to be found in the strangest nooks and corners, hiding made, on the Premium charged on all Insuraway behind shops, or secreting themselves andes effected with this Office; such Return up alleys. Unlike the Paris enfé, which being payable on the issue of the Rolicy. delights in the free sunshine of the boulevard, and displays its harmless revellers to the passers-by, the Loudon tavern aims at cosmess, quiet, and privacy. It partitions and curtains off its guests as if they were conspirators, and the wine they drank was forbidden by the law. Of such taverns the "Chapter" is a good example. The "Chapter Coffee House," at the corner of Chapter House Court, was in the last con-Thornton, in the Connoiseur, Jan., 1754, third being carried to Reserve Fund. says:-- The conversation here naturally turns upon the newest publications, but their criticisms are somewhat singular. When they say a good book they do not mean to praise the style or sontiment, but the quick and extensive sale of it. That book is best which sells most." It, 1770 Chatterton, in one of those apparently hopeful letters he wrote home while in reality his proud heart was breaking, says:—"I am quite familiar at the 'Chapter Coffee House," and know 'all the geniuses there." He desires a friend to send him whatever he has published, to be left at the "Chapter." So, again, writing from the King's Bench, he says a gentleman whom he met at the "Chapter" had promised to introduce him as a travelling tutor to the young Duke of Northumberland; "but, alas! I spoke no tongue but my own." Perhaps that very day Chattarton came, half starved, and listened with cager ears to great authors talking. Oliver Goldsmith dined there, with Lloyd, that reckless friend of still more reckless Churchill, and some Grubstreet cronies, and had to pay for the lot, Lloyd having quite forgotten the important fact that he was moneyless. Goldsmith's favourite seat at the ." Chapter" became a seat of honour, and was pointed out to visitors. Leather tokens of the coffee house are still in existence. Mrs. Gaskell has sketched the "Chapter" in 1848, with its low heavy. beamed ceilings, wainscoted rooms, and its broad, dark, shaflow staircase. She decribes it as formerly frequented by university men. country clergymen, and country booksellers, who; friendless in Loudon, liked to hear the literary chat. Hew persons slept there, and in a long, low, dingy room up-stairs the periodical meeting, of the trade were held. "The high, narrow windows looked into the gloomy Row." Nothing of motion or of change premium contributed. could be seen in the grim, dark houses opposite, so near and close, although the whole width of the Kow was between. The mighty roar of London ran round like the sound of an unseen ocean, yet every footfall on the pavement below might be heard distinctly in that unfrequented street. The frequenters of the "Chapter Coffee House" (1797-1805) have been carefully described by Sir-Richard Phillips. Alexander Stevens, editor of the "Annual Biography and Obituary," was one of the choice spirits who met nightly in the "Wittingemot," as it was called, or the north-east corner box in the coffee room.
